ISTIC 10th Anniversary 2018

The International Science, Technology and Innovation Centre for South-South Cooperation under the Auspices of UNESCO (ISTIC) was one of the successful outcome of the 2nd Summit of G77 + China in Doha 2005. UNESCO requested Malaysia to host ISTIC as a UNESCO Category 2 Centre. All operational and administrative expenditure of a UNESCO Category 2 Centre is borne by the host nation. Malaysia accepted as her contribution to sustainable development in sister G77 nations through South-South cooperation in STI. ISTIC was launched in Kuala Lumpur on 28 May 2008 under the UNESCO-Malaysia Agreement on ISTIC 2008-2015. The UNESCO-Malaysia Agreement on ISTIC was renewed in 2016, extending the life of ISTIC to 2021. In ISTIC first decade, ISTIC has established an international reputation as the most eminent and respected centre in South-South cooperation in UNESCO and in the UN System. www.istic-unesco.org

In 2018, all ISTIC activities and events will celebrate her first decade of achievements and strategize for the next decade.

The highlight of ISTIC 10th Anniversary Celebration 2018 will be in the week beginning 7 May in Kuala Lumpur.

The anchor event will be the International High-Level Conference on Climate Change Education. Other related events will include, but not limited to:

- IAP SEP/ISTIC/LAMAP Inquiry Based Science Education Training Workshop for IBSE master trainers on Climate Change Education;
- 11th ISTIC Governing Board Meeting
- ISTIC /Ministry of Women, Family & Community Development / UN Women Training Workshop on Technopreneurship for Women in STI

International Conference on Climate Change Education 7-9 May 2018, Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia

Introduction

Since 2008, ISTIC has focused her key agenda on the sustainable development of G77 countries through South-South cooperation in STI from the UN Millennium Development Goals (MDGs) 2000-2015 to the UN Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs) 2016-2030. In view of the imminent threat to humankind existence on earth posed by human induced global warming, ISTIC has decided that the overall target in celebrating her 10th Anniversary in 2018 will be on SDG No 13 “Take Urgent Action to Combat Climate Change and Its Impacts”. The principal contribution to global warming has been the profligate consumption of human societies exhausting Earth’s resources and polluting the atmosphere with greenhouse gases. There is therefore an urgent need for humankind to adopt sustainable lifestyle. The solution is climate change education. SDG No 13 recognizes the importance of education in its target 13.3 and indicator 13.3.1:

- 13.3 Improve education, awareness-raising and human and institutional capacity on climate change mitigation, adaptation, impact reduction and early warning;
- 13.3.1 Number of countries that have integrated mitigation, adaptation, impact reduction and early warning into primary, secondary and tertiary curricula.

The United Nations Climate Change Convention (UNCCC, 1992) and the Paris Agreement (UN, 2015) also recognize the importance of climate change education by stating that “The development and implementation of education and training programmes ... in particular for developing countries” (UNCCC Art. 6.b.ii) and “Parties should take measures ... to enhance climate change education” (Paris Agreement Art. 12”).

Yet climate change education has not been given much priority in implementation of SDG No. 13. There is no mention of education in the 2017 Report of the UN Secretary-General “Progress towards the Sustainable Development Goals” with respect to SDG No.13. http://www.un.org/ga/search/view\_doc.asp?symbol=E/2017/66&Lang=E

The InterAcademy Partnership (IAP), whose members are 110 national academies of sciences and 35 national academies of medicines, voices her concern about the lack of global action on climate change education by issuing “A Statement on Climate Change and Education”. <http://www.interacademies.org/Statements/38806.aspx>

It states:

“It is well recognized (5th IPCC Assessment Report) that the impacts of climate change will disproportionately impact poor people. The consequences will mostly affect the 3 billion people living in poverty, especially in the developing world. Youngsters and children (aged below 15) represent one-quarter of the global population. Among them, one billion have poor schooling, especially in science and sustainable development; compared to boys, education for girls is even poorer. At the current rate, only 14% of these children will reach secondary- level education in 2030 (UNESCO 2016). A considerable and tenacious effort is needed in schools, connected with families and communities, in order to empower young people, not only in the concerns resulting from climate change, but importantly also in the social and economic benefits offered by working, with hope in the future, towards a more sustainable world. Inter-connected areas of intervention such as safe water management, alternative energy sources, traditional knowledge, sustainable agriculture, the bioeconomy and green chemistry can be addressed. But climate change is a rapidly evolving problem. To predict what will be the most competent decisions and debates in twenty years' time, when the current generation of young students will be decision-makers, is difficult. Hence, education today must equip them with the capability of understanding and of making decisions based on evidence and critical thought, rather than allowing a priori opinions or irrationality guide their choices.”

The IAP Statement is a clarion call to scientists and engineers, especially in IAP member academies to champion climate change education as “scientists and engineers are a powerful voice for the importance of such education, both globally and within their own countries and communities. They are important advocates for the importance of climate education, the critical role of teachers, and the needed resources.”

In response to IAP’s clarion call, an Office for Climate Education is being set up under the leadership of Fondation La main à la pâte (LAMAP) of France. <http://www.fondation-lamap.org/fr/page/64267/loffice-for-climate-education-bientot-abrite-par-la-fondation-la-main-a-la-pate>

ISTIC has been a staunch partner of LAMAP in G77 since 2008, The ISTIC International Conference on Climate Change Education is a platform to engage governments, academia, corporations, students, parents and teachers in G77 countries to support climate change education through active participation in the International Office for Climate Education”.

Conference Objectives

Women, youth and children in developing countries are suffering and will continue to suffer the worst impacts of climate change, climate change education must prepare them for facing the challenges of climate change in their everyday life such as violent natural disasters; food and water scarcity, job security etc. Hopefully climate change education will also prepare them for employment in climate change prevention and mitigation industrial and services sectors. Above all, they should become advocates of lifestyle change from excessive to moderate consumption with respect to the scarce Earth resources thus reducing the emission of greenhouse gases. Through their proficient use of social media, they will become the agents of change in their communities for sustainable development.

Within the above framework, the international conference will identify:

- effective mechanism on how to integrate climate change education into national education curriculum.
- good practices on climate change education.
- support for teacher training on climate change education the Inquiry Based Science Education (IBSE) way;
- learning resources and good practices that will enhance climate change education;

so as to help amplifying the action of the now established Office for Climate Education in Paris, and its associated Global Network.
